

Gifts and Business Entertainment

Definition

A Gifts and Business Entertainment Policy establishes guidelines for offering, receiving, and managing gifts and entertainment in a business context to ensure ethical practices within business dealings.

Scope

The policy is applicable to all employees.

Policy Guidelines

- Gifts within the context of a business relationship should not be given or accepted if they could influence a business decision or are considered by an impartial observer to be extravagant. It is not company policy to offer gifts other than small value until an exception is approved by the CEO.
- No business gifts should be accepted by employees.
- Modest hospitality during official business can be offered and accepted as part of normal business courtesies, for other than modest prior consultation of the HOD is necessary.

Procedure

1. The employee's responsibility is to inform HOD and HR, submit the gifts received and provide details.
2. HR will assess the value of all gifts received through a visit to the market/website. (minimum three references).
3. After the assessment, HR will decide whether the gift returned to the employee with an email thanking him for keeping up the spirit, arrange an open auction or send the proceeds to an appropriate charity.

Gifts within the Company

The company does not, in general, subscribe to gift presentations to its employees. Therefore, gift presentations to employees will be limited to service, programs and to resigned employees subject to the approval of the CEO.

Business Entertainment

Hospitality outside business affiliates, e.g. client lunches, business dinners or tickets to events and recreational activities, will require the prior written approval of the CEO. Reciprocation should not be automatic, a prior consultation sequence of entertainment should be avoided, and require written approval of the CEO. Employee should ensure that subsequent actions are not deemed to be influenced by such hospitality.